The SPR program appears to have arisen from both the SOPMOD BLOCK II program and the Rhexil Recon of the US Navy Seals, a 16-inch M16 M16 carbine. Stock Sprs were seen with the fixed buttstocks M16A1 or M16A2, M4 Telescopic ButtStocks and the Telescopic Buttstock Crane Enhanced. [1] Rifles are compatible with any type of stock system developed for M16. [3] In all cases, a floating forearm is used, which does not touch the barrel directly. FUZIL MK 12 MOD 1 in USMC service in Afghanistan, 2010. The first SPRs used free floating pipes of carbon fiber PRI Gen I or Gen II. The SPR and MK 12 mod 0 / h use the arm # 40 flip up rear view mirror. The SPR program was a consequence of the desire for the special forces of the US Exchange and Navy by a rifle with effective reach greater than a carbine type M4, but even less than a standard M16A2 / A4 model. ^ a € erOPS Inc 12th Model Style Suppressor Comparison € (Ops Inc 12th Model Style Suppressor Comparison € (Tipal) is mounted to the right of rifle's sights protectors.
